	For Spring 2022 and Fall 2022 consideration only:
Southern Methodist University	Due to COVID-19 and issues with accessing testing sites, the following programs in the Dedman College of Humanities and Sciences have decided to temporarily make the GRE optional for the current application cycle	https://www.smu.edu/Moody/Prospective-Students/Dedman-GRE-2021-Applications
Stanford University	A: Most departments require the GRE general test. Some departments require additional subject tests, and a few non-M.D. programs in the School of Medicine allow applicants to submit MCAT scores in lieu of GRE scores. Consult department websites or the Graduate Programs page for departmental requirements. If you need to take a test, please arrange to take it early to ensure that your scores reach Stanford by the application deadline. Applicants to the School of Law, School of Business and M.D. program take the LSAT, GMAT and MCAT, respectively. COVID-19 Update: Departments who accept GRE scores are also accepting the GRE at-home test for those impacted by COVID-1	https://gradadmissions.stanford.edu/about/frequently-asked-questions/gre-and-toefl
Stevens Institute of Technology	Stevens Institute of Technology will be adopting a GRE/GMAT test optional for the Spring 2022 intake for all master's program applicants. If submitted, GRE/GMAT scores will be taken into consideration for admissions decisions. Submitting a test score is an opportunity for applicants to present additional evidence of their quantitative and verbal skills. We encourage those students who have taken the test to consider submitting scores. For PhD applicants: The GRE/GMAT is currently a requirement and for those who seek accommodation due to the pandemic, approval from the respective academic department is required. For more information, please contact Patricia Cardenas by e-mailing pcardena@stevens.edu.	https://www.stevens.edu/admissions/graduate-admissions/application-process/requirements
